Mr. Buchanan, after having excited the indignation and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination in the property of the engineers which speak of the objectional left attres in the route of 32°, but he does not introduce the favorable consideration which the Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree of the delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree of the history and the foes to a degree of the delimination and contempt of his foes to a degree of the delimination and co ings. Such being notoriously the intimate relations tary of War and the engineer unprecedented in the annals of Presidential delinquency, is at last insulted and deserted by his friends, by the very friends at whose vile instignation be has debased himself before the country, and all the furious objurgations, fall the sounding exhorts and all the piteons and pitiful conjurstions, and all the piteons and pitiful conjurstions of his facile organ are answered by the disgusted receasants with words of indifference and tones of acorn. They are as deaf to entreaty as they are harmanished to menace. They like the treason, it appears, but they despise the traitor, and he hasn't wit or power enough to conquer their dindain. Bir. Buchanan is at this early day politically ruined. No wooder that, defeated at all points, diagraced, impotent, overthrown by his opporents and discarded by his supporters, his organ, the Washington Union, thanders and fashes with the burden of his grief. It would be a most numatural and inhuman organ if the state of the properties of its master renders its first.

ht would be a most nunatural and inhuman organ if it didn't. The despair of its master renders its fury tolerable, if not decent. Let it bowl. tolerable, if not decent. Let it bowl.

Perhaps, even in view of this striking speciacle of offs ial but "atton, it would be scarcely project to exclaim "How have the mighty fallen!" for it is almost a reliculous a cuse of terms to style so insignificant a spirit as Mr. Buchanan's mighty, even in a relectored flourish. A much fifter exclanization would be. "How have the puny leen namasked!" mines, nos not exceed courses. A much fifter exclanation would be. "How have the puny been namasked."

Coming into power a little upwards of a year ago, with a working majority of his political friends in both Homes of Courress, Mr. Buchanan has so believe the control of the political friends in both Homes of Courress, Mr. Buchanan has so believe to the Position in School of the course of the political friends in the with a working majority of his pointest research both Houses of Congress, Mr. Buchanan has so bemeaned him off as to suffer defeat on every public
